This course is designed to familiarize officers with the various disciplines of “detecting deception”. This is accomplished through not only reading non-verbal body language but by detailed analysis of verbal and written statements. Techniques which have been proven successful in obtaining the best and the most productive results will be emphasized.

Upon completion of this course, the student should be able to:

1. Identify the number one problem in reading non-verbal body language.
2. Recognizing an “evasive verbal response”.
3. Identify the ten steps of an interrogation to prompt a voluntary confession.
4. Define the law governing confession admissibility.
